the 1990s, the number of people with a diagnosis of schizophrenia has increased in the United Kingdom (Meltzer 1996). The prevalence of schizophrenia in the United Kingdom is estimated to be 1.2% (Meltzer 1996).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with a diagnosis of schizophrenia. The United Kingdom has a number of government departments responsible for the care of people with a diagnosis of schizophrenia. The Department of Health is responsible for the provision of mental health services, while the Department of Social Security is responsible for the provision of social security benefits. the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 12.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased from 4.5 million to 6.5 million (Office of National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop services to meet the needs of older people, and the importance of ensuring that the needs of older people are met in the community. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the development of community care packages, the establishment of local authority social services, and the development of voluntary sector services. The aim of this paper is to review the literature on the needs of older people, and to discuss the implications for service provision.

Introduction

The needs of older people are complex and multifaceted, and they vary significantly between individuals. The needs of older people are often divided into three main categories: physical, psychological, and social. Physical needs include the need for food, shelter, and clothing. Psychological needs include the need for a sense of purpose, a sense of belonging, and a sense of control. Social needs include the need for companionship, support, and a sense of community.

The needs of older people are often met through a combination of formal and informal services. Formal services include social services, health services, and housing services. Informal services include family, friends, and neighbours. The needs of older people are often met through a combination of these services, and the effectiveness of these services is often determined by the quality of the relationships between the older person and the service providers.
